Not illustrated. 1823 Excerpt: .from the observations made by the European travellers who first penetrated into that continent, it appears undeniable that slavery must have prevailed from time immemorial among such of the tribes as had never carried on any commerce with foreign nations. When Battel first visited the Giagas, those people had never before seen a white man; yet they welcomed him and the English, with whom he had come, to their country, invited them to bring their goods on shore, and without hesitation loaded the ships with slaves. The Giagas were indeed waging war with the kingdom of Benguela; and being cannibals, who prefer human flesh to all others, the slaves whom they had sold to the English were probably prisoners they would have killed and eaten if they had not found an opportunity of otherwise disposing of them to greater advantage. But as they had not...
