Not illustrated. 1878 Excerpt: .string, entering the first sphere at A, and leaving it at C, then entering the second sphere at D and leaving it at F; so that ABC is a diameter of the first sphere, and DEF a diameter of the second sphere. The string rises vertically at A and at F. The tension of the string is equal to the weight of one sphere. For we might suppose the two spheres and the part of the string from A to F to become rigid. Then the two vertical tensions would support the weight of the two spheres; and thus the tension would be equal to the weight of one sphere. Now consider the forces which act on one sphere, say that which has its centre at B. These are its weight, say W, vertically downwards at B, a tension equal to W vertically upwards at A,...
