Not illustrated. 1857 Excerpt: . . . provided with instincts for the production of its species. If the insect is a parasite on two plants, it is not at a loss to discover one of them; but deprive it of one of these plants, , and the result is that the remaining one suffers doubly. It is astonishing to witness the manoeuvres of these minute animals to sustain nature. Every type of creation is destined to pass through its course of life; and we find, as one species becomes extinct, another hitherto unknown to us, springs up, as if by magic, in some other part of the globe, to fill up the vacancy. Of this wheat parasite I shall make some further remarks. It is not known at present; and until we do enquire into its origin and habits, much cannot be said of it. ARTICLE VII. --On the Natural History of the Rosignol or Song Sparrow, Fringilla melodia. This interesting little bird is one of the first to proclaim with his song the return of spring, with its wood-music, flowers and soft southern breezes. His note is no sooner heard than all nature seems to arouse itself from the torpor of winter and burst forth into an universal revivification. No Canadian can listen to the sweet ditty of the rosignol, at the same time recalling the incidents of his school-boy days, without feeling his heart warm towards the happy little creature. It is remarkable that with respect to so very common...
